

Why orange butterflies?

We started our journey in 2017 as Women Empowerment Centre in Kirtipur to empower women by providing them with the required skills to become an entrepreneur. Women Empowerment Centre (WEC) is working to change the dimension of women in Nepal. We promote women-led enterprise, women's employment, and financial independence of women by enhancing their skills and connecting their services of products to the market.

Throughout our journey, we thrived in working towards our mission, however, we want to broaden our work area and address its need. During my training at kanthari, I felt the need for Orange Butterflies to accomplish our revised vision and mission of the organization to represent our beneficiaries and the work we do.

- During January, we had different donor meetings under fundraising programs. We also had different beneficiary meetings to know their needs before we had our meeting with donors.
- During February, we worked on our policies to strengthen our organization. To reach out to more people we developed our website and have been working on it since January.
- During March, we also had a few new members who took lifetime membership to support us financially.

- Color orange represents passion, change and hope.
- Butterfly: It has a power of transformation and diversifies the nature; Similarly, Women can diversify the world if opportunities are placed.

We are on a mission to create women entrepreneurs, decrease the gap of gender inequality and have the say of women in familial, social, and political spheres.
